INSTITUTIONAL IMPACT

Rationale for Program: The History program not only exposes students to a broad range of history fields, it teaches the methodology employed by historians. This methodology teaches critical skills that are applicable and serviceable in a large variety of other disciplines. Furthermore, students who complete this program will be well prepared to undertake upper division history courses. As an AA degree with a language component, it will transfer to any school in the state that offers a Bachelor of Arts in History.

Financial Impact: This is an on-going, base-funded program with an existing budget. Curriculum development to support the program might warrant the hiring of new faculty and dollars for additional adjunct training.

PROGRAM ACADEMIC INFORMATION

Program Description: The History Department provides a wide variety of courses that range from general surveys to specialized topics. The program goes far beyond an emphasis on coverage and content; each course deals directly and indirectly with the historian's craft, i.e., the practice of interpretation and narration based on the systematic analysis of evidence. Additionally, all regular offerings carry the General Education designation. This means that this program is also a vehicle for students to broaden their perspectives and deepen their understandings of the world around them.

ASLO	Program Objectives/Student Outcomes	Program Assessments
1.	1. Students will: a) acquire substantive knowledge of the major social, political, and economic themes in a variety of history fields; b) understand the ways in which the study of the past informs the present; c) understand the methodologies historians utilize; d) be able to identify major schools of thought.	1.To gauge the program's effectiveness in increasing students' substantive knowledge in History, the History Department may employ any or all of the following: * A survey of majors who have completed the program. * A survey of graduates who have completed upper-level courses elsewhere. * Embedded writing assignment(s) across selected sections of American Civilization (History 1700) which will be scored using a departmentally agreed-upon rubric. * Embedded writing assignment(s) in selected sections of the 4 majors courses: 1100, 1110, 2700, and 2710 which will be scored using a departmentally agreed-upon rubric. * Other measures as designed by the History Department faculty.
2.	Students will speak and write analytically, comparatively, and persuasively about historical themes, interpretations, arguments and ideas in a skilled and respectful manner.	2.To gauge the program's effectiveness in increasing students' oral and written communication skills, the History Department may employ any or all of the following: * A History conference or workshop where majors or graduates present

		their own research or portfolios of work. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> * Embedded writing assignment(s) across selected sections of American Civilization (1700), a sample of which will be scored using a departmentally approved rubric. * Embedded writing assignment(s) in selected sections of the 4 majors courses: 1100, 1110, 2700, 2710 which will be scored using a departmentally approved rubric. * Other measures designed by the History faculty.
4.	4. Students will be able to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a) gather, identify, differentiate and analyze data from both primary and secondary historical sources; b) interrogate and contextualize sources; c) evaluate contested interpretations; d) use evidence to create narrative; e) revise narrative in the light of new findings. 	4. To gauge the program's effectiveness in teaching students to think critically, the History Department may employ any or all of the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> * A survey of our majors/graduates that will probe the students' sense of their own metacognitive growth and affective development in this area while in our program. * A History conference or workshop where majors/graduates present their own research or portfolios. * Embedded writing assignment(s) across selected sections of American Civilization (1700), a sample of which will be scored using a departmentally approved rubric. * Embedded writing assignment(s) in selected sections of the 4 majors courses: 1100, 1110, 2700, 2710 which will be scored using a departmentally approved rubric. * Other measures designed by the History faculty.
